After graduating from high school, he attended Lane College in Jackson, Tennessee and the University of Iowa. He was active in the Lane College marching band, in which he played the clarinet which he enjoyed for many years.

Growing up, Eugene loved going to church. He served as the master of ceremony for many church programs. He was a good speaker at a very young age.

As a child, he was a very big fan of the World Wrestling Federation (WWF).

He was constantly doing wrestling moves with his cousins, and was constantly being hollered at to "stop all that noise", which he did not adhere to for too long.

As an adult, Eugene thirsted for knowledge. He was always expanding his knowledge of many topics by reading often. He was very studious. He always seemed to know a little bit about everything. He held various jobs in the food service industry in Milwaukee and in Chicago. His latest interests were investing and trading.

Eugene always greeted people with a friendly smile. He was a warm and kind person who when you would tell him something that he liked, he would always say "that's what's up". He strived to see the best in all people. He was always positive.
